

COUNT TWO: (Title 21, United States Code, §841(a)(1) - Possession With Intent To Distribute Controlled Substances)

The Grand Jury further charges that:

On or about February 28, 2004, at New Bedford, in the District of Massachusetts,

CORY HUBBARD,

defendant herein, knowingly and intentionally possessed with intent to distribute more than five grams of cocaine base, a Schedule II controlled substance.

All in violation of Title 21, United States Code, Section 841(a)(1).

have long decried the disparity between penalties for crack cocaine and powder cocaine.

"It was right to change it, and it should be changed even further," she said.

The third prisoner whose release has been ordered is Deborah Woodard. Young reduced her sentence from 135 to 120 months, making her eligible for release in June.

A bill pushed through Congress in the national frenzy following the 1986 death of Len Bias, a first-round National Basketball Association draft pick for the Celtics whose death was initially linked to crack cocaine, imposed extreme mandatory penalties for crack.

Under the law, someone caught with 1 gram of crack received the same sentence as someone with 100 grams of powder cocaine. It also imposed a minimum mandatory sentence of five years in prison for dealing 5 grams of crack and 10 years in prison for dealing 50 grams of crack.

Advocates of the two-tier penalty system said crack was cheaper and more addictive than powder cocaine and was more frequently linked to violent crime. But critics said that those differences were overstated and that blacks bore the brunt of the inequity, because they account for at least 80 percent of federal crack defendants.

The Sentencing Commission reduced the sentencing range for crack cocaine offenses by two levels last year, lowering the maximum recommended sentence for selling 5 grams of cocaine from 78 months to 63 months.

Nonetheless, prison terms for crack cocaine are still longer than those for powder cocaine, because only Congress can change the 100-to-1 ratio and mandatory minimum sentences.

Mary Price of Families Against Mandatory Minimums, an advocacy group, said she has heard of judges in other states issuing orders similar to those in Massachusetts.
